

LITERARY CENSORS IN BLUE.

Justice White Disagrees with Capt. McLaughlin's Views on Books.

Vendors of Alleged Immoral Literature Dismissed.

Lichtenstein's ANOTHER LARGE Gingham Sale

100,000 YARDS OF GINGHAM AT

9c. PER YARD;

Worth from 18c. to 39c.

J. LICHENSTEIN & SON'S,
Grand, E'dridge & Forsyth Sts.

IT'S MRS. YOUNG'S TURN NOW.

Zealous Clerk Torrey Taken to Albany on Her Conspiracy Charge.

Lightning Change No. 5 in Perfumer Young's Divorce Case.

Theodore W. Torrey, of 43 West Twelfth street, the clerk on whose evidence Richard D. Young, the rich and eccentric perfumer, of 100 William street, sought to sustain a charge of infidelity against his wife, awoke in Cell No. 8 at Inspector Byrnes's hospital in Mulberry street this morning.

He had been arrested by Detectives Heidelberg and Dolan on a requisition issued by Gov. Hill at the request of Gov. Abbott of New Jersey on a warrant charging him with conspiracy.

Then they went before Justice White and handed him the book to read the marked page.

Joe Moss, of the firm of Howe and Himmel, appeared for the prisoner and insisted that he was innocent of the charge.

Mr. Constock—that no pure minded person could take exception to the novel on the ground that it was immoral.

After the trial, Justice White declared:

"Well, I really do not see anything vicious or obscene here."

Mr. Constock, with a look of intense astonishment on his face, said:

"No, I do not," responded the Justice.

"Don't you think that the minds of young men and women are apt to be influenced and perverted by such a work?"

Mr. Constock—no man pure minded person could take exception to the novel on the ground that it was immoral.

After the trial, Justice White declared:

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.

"Well, I think you did right to suppress the sale of the book on the street," and hurried away, leaving the Captain to fight out his cause.

He made a bitter fight at that, and in addition to the book displayed a circular, copies of which the peddlers had hung all over the city.

When shown this circular the Maristate said:

"Well, I think you did well to arrest these men, because they were swindling people."

But this circular lay a load of trouble to Mr. Constock, who returned to a back room and pored on the pages again for half an hour.

Then he returned the book to Capt. McStock.